

Conflict of Interest Disclosure and Resolution Policy

The American Professional Society of ADHD and Related Disorders (APSARD) is committed to be in exemplary compliance with the sponsorship requirements of the Accreditation Council for Continuing Medical Education (ACCME). APSARD has strengthened its process to ensure that any member, who has an opportunity to affect the content of CME, has declared any personal conflicts of interest.

ACCME considers financial relationships to create actual conflicts of interest in CME when individuals have both a financial relationship with a commercial interest and the opportunity to affect the content of CME about the product or services of that commercial interest.

Disclosure of conflict of interests to responsible officials of APSARD is an ethical responsibility of the members having the conflict. The Board of the APSARD has the ultimate responsibility of determining what limitations or what actions may be necessary to protect the APSARD. If a member is uncertain whether a conflict of interest exists, it is better to err on the side of disclosure:

Our mechanisms for resolving conflicts of interest for APSARD:

- Initially make certain that all speakers disclose conflicts of interest in an understandable and effective manner.
- Communicate clearly that APSARD is committed to the highest principles of compliance with ACCME guidelines for identification and resolution of conflict of interest.
- Communicate the expectation that the presentation in both written and podium presentation (or other vehicle) will be free of any commercial bias, and wherever possible, presenters should use high level evidence-based data to support their conclusions and opinions.
- In advance of the meeting, the presentation will be “peer reviewed” by individuals not conflicted for the content in question (moderator, program chairs, others) and that the speaker understand that the content may require changing if concerns are raised.
- A session moderator or program chair should identify through a completed form whether commercial bias was evident in the presentation.
